

What a long and glorious ride it has been. Who would have guessed that in 1989, when Ray Doyle and I met in the beer-soaked and smoke-filled confines of the Palomino Club in North Hollywood, California, that we would soon form a band and become modern day traveling minstrels whose trail would circle the globe for the next 20 years. We have been gifted with the incredible power of music. It is the common denominator that has brought us and thousands of music loving souls together in every kind of music venue imaginable... from the lingerie department of a Walmart in Wichita Falls, Texas, to a 20,000-seat amphitheatre in Kumamoto, Japan. But our favorite places to perform have always been the intimate little showrooms and theaters tucked away into the multi-layered fabric of America. The Western Jubilee Warehouse in Colorado Springs is one of those venues with a consistently magical aura. It is haunted by good ghosts that spur our souls to lay down the best licks we've got. On a hot July night in 2009, we found ourselves on its friendly little stage once again. The recorder was rolling and captured a good dose of our essence. Enjoy!
