ZYDECO CHAMPS

As the title indicates, Zydeco Champs includes many of the past and present heavyweights of Zydeco on its card. Culled from the vaults of Arhoolie Records, this collection presents a solid one-two punch of the historic and enjoyable black French dance music of Southwest Louisiana.

While most listeners are by now familiar with how Zydeco music sounds, some are still not exactly sure how this accordion-led music came to be referred to as “Zydeco.” The word zydeco is Creole slang for les harlots (snap beans), and was used in the title of a traditional Creole song called L’Hariots Sont Pas Sales (The Snap Beans Aren’t Salty). Today in Southwest Louisiana, Zydeco not only refers to the music but also to the party that goes along with the food, drinking and dancing that goes along with the music.

The Zydeco champ who reigned the longest was without doubt the late Clifton Chenier. There is really no way to overstate Chenier’s importance in the development of Zydeco. Not only did he provide nearly all of the major stylistic changes Zydeco has undergone, but he made the style one of America’s best known regional music forms. Understandably he always has been, and always will be, referred to as the “King of Zydeco.”

Five tracks, from various periods of Chenier’s career are found here. The knockout opener is the stripped down, Josephine Par Se Ma Femme, which recalls the early sound of Zydeco. While this track was recorded relatively recently (1970), Chenier’s accordion was backed only by a rubberband and drums — similar to the way he heard Zydeco played when he was a child.

Black Gal, which features Clifton’s uncle Morris “Big” Chenier on fiddle, also recalls the formative days of Zydeco. As primitive as it sounds, Black Gal was a hit in the South in 1967, becoming Chenier’s best-selling single as it appeared on several different labels.

Chenier was a tireless performer and two live tracks recorded in 1971 are also included. Zydeco Cha Cha and Tu Le Ton Son Ton both demonstrate the staggering punch Chenier and his Red Hot Louisiana Band displayed on stage. To emphasize the strong influence blues had on Chenier, and how he could interpret it to fit Zydeco, this anthology includes the tour-de-force Hungry Man from 1978.

An obvious heir to Clifton’s title is his son C.J. Chenier. Appropriately C.J. covers two of his father’s most popular tunes: Banana Man and My Baby Don’t Wear No Shoes. A long time member of Clifton’s Red Hot Louisiana band, C.J. took over the group after his father’s death in 1987 and has since forged his own successful recording career on Arhoolie and Slack Records.

An early inspiration to the elder Chenier was the great Amédé Ardoin, the first black Creole musician to record back in 1928. Ardoin’s emotive accordion sound would influence generations of Zydeco and Cajun musicians. La Valse De Ballard was dubbed from a rare 78 rpm recording and it offers a unique glimpse at modern Zydeco and Cajun roots.

A cousin of Ardoin’s, “Bois Sec” Ardoin carries on the tradition of Amédé. Also an accordionist, Bois Sec teamed with Canray Fontenot to play house dances and record together. Les Barres De La Prison and Petite Et La Grosse are representative of their haunting sound. Another Ardoin relative, Lawrence Ardoin contributes the boisterous Midland Two-Step (which underlines Zydeco’s major purpose — dancing!), and I’ve Been There.

Although it didn’t feature an accordion, many music historians credit Clarence Garlow’s Bon Ton Roula as the first Zydeco hit because it charted in 1950. Featuring a calypso beat and rhythm and blues instrumentation, the lyrics to Bon Ton Roula neatly describe just how much fun you can have at a Zydeco dance.

Because very few pre-mid-1960s commercial Zydeco recordings exist, music historians have had to rely on field recordings to document the development of the style. Understandably, Zydeco Champs includes several which date from 1961 and were recorded by Chris Strachwitz at Zydeco dances. One of the best of these tracks was provided by accordionist Paul McZiel who contributes I’m Sad and I’m Blue. An obscure artist, McZiel plays in an energetic style that has always identified Zydeco music.

Other field recordings include Ambrose Sam’s rough-and-ready I’m Going Away and his brother Herbert’s Good Rockin’ Boogie. Considered two of the founding fathers of Zydeco, the Sam’s tracks might lack the professional polish provided in a recording studio but they certainly aren’t lightweight by any means.

To further demonstrate the fact that Zydeco is often passed down from successive generations—as if the Chenier and Ardoin examples weren’t enough—this anthology includes two tracks from Herbert Sam’s son’s contemporary group The Sam Brothers 5. Lafayette Special and the short but sweet S. B. 5 — both instrumentals — display the influence of their father and also Clifton Chenier’s modern touch.

Two other challengers on this set include Preston Frank and Leo Thomas. While their names aren’t familiar outside of Louisiana’s Zydeco circuit, they team up on Mon Chere ’Tite Monde and Shake What You Got to capture the ever-popular authentic downhome Zydeco sound.

The last artists presented here are John Delafosse and the Eunice Playboys who are currently one of the most popular and authentic Zydeco bands in South Louisiana. Of course Delafosse’s calling card, Joe Pete Got Two Women, is here as is The Mardi Gras Song, which features some powerhouse accordion.

So there you have it. Twenty-two rounds of great Zydeco that is sure to T.K.O. any listener. But then what did you expect? All of these artists are truly Zydeco Champs.
