DEAR ABE LINKHORN
THE SATIRE OF THE CIVIL WAR

A selection from the contemporary satirical writing of Artemus Ward, Petroleum V. Nasty, Bill Arp, and "A Disbanded Volunteer."

INTRODUCTION

"Are you aware, Sir, that the crisis is with us?"

"No," says I, getting up and looking under the seat, "where is she?"

"It's here -- it's everywhere," he said.

Says I, "Why do you talk!" and got up again and looked all round. "I must say, my friend," I continued, as I resumed my seat, "that I can't see nothin' of no crisis myself." I felt somewhat alarmed, and arose in a stentorian voice observed that if any lady or gentleman in that there car had a crisis concealed about their persons they'd better produce it to once or suffer the consequences ...

ARTEMUS WARD

In the fall of 1860 there were few Americans who were any better prepared for the secession of the southern states and the outbreak of the Civil War than was the popular humorist, Artemus Ward. Even the people most deeply committed to breaking up the Union seemed unsure of what they were doing or of the possible consequences. In the first confusion of secession many people in the Union states seemed to feel that the southern states were justified in taking their separate course. As Artemus Ward expressed it, "... if any state wants to secede let 'em ... " It was the attack on Fort Sumter that suddenly forced a realization of the full implications of the southern action. After Sumter, Ward wrote, "... J. Davis, the minute you fire a gun at a piece of dry-goods called the Star Spangled Banner, the North gets up and rises on mass, in defence of that banner." But through much of the war, until the victory of the Union seemed almost a certainty, some of the confusion continued. In border states, like Kentucky, Missouri, and Maryland, it was difficult, for several months, to be sure that they would remain in the Union. The rival parties jostled each other for supremacy, and it was only when the issue became clearly one of civil war that the states remained in the Union.

Throughout the war there was an active peace movement in some of the union states. Calling themselves "Knights of the Golden Circle," then the "Order of the American Knights," then the "Sons of Liberty," Democrats who had opposed Lincoln's Republican government tried to regain political power, with the intention of ending the war and recognizing the Confederacy. Although to many Union sympathizers these peace Democrats were little better than reptiles, the name "Copperheads" was given them; the Republican Party, which had failed to capture a majority of the popular vote in 1860, was forced to struggle with its internal opponents throughout the war. In the despiring days of 1862, Lincoln's party failed to take even his own state of Illinois.

Because the war had come as the climax of a long, bitter argument, the newspapers, the magazines, and the popular publishing world still jangled with angry voices. If their tone sometimes sounds shrill and insistent it is because they realized that the issue could be decided with words. Throughout 1862 and 1863, as the Federal forces suffered defeat after defeat, it seemed that the Union states might be persuaded to give up the struggle and recognize the Confederacy. Northern and Southern writers abused each other in newspapers published in nearly every city and large town in the Union and the Confederacy. These writers jeered, swore, insulted, and triumphed with the fortunes of their armies, and in their sometimes bitter writings there is a history, an irreverent, uncivil history, of the Civil War.

In the century that has passed since the War, much of this newspaper writing has become unreadable. Many of the events and the emotions they aroused have been forgotten, and the immediacy of the writing has been lost. Only one group of writers, the topical humorists, have lost none of their freshness and vitality. It was a period of satirical writing in the United States. As a writer has said, "Through the '60's and '70's the spirit of burlesque was abroad in the land like a powerful genie let out of a wino bag."1

It was a golden age of American satire and burlesque humor. "Lucia di Lammermoor" became, on the stage of New York's Olympic Theatre, "Lucy Did Man a Moor." For "after pieces" there were pieces like Duddy Rice's "opera," "Bone Spush Diablo." The same satirical spirit filled the newspapers and almanacs with stories, jokes, and supposed letters from special correspondents about events of the day. The most popular of these early correspondents were the Maine writer, Seba Smith, who, writing under the name of Major Jack Downing, contributed a series of letters attacking the Democratic government of Andrew Jackson; and James Russell Lowell, who created Rosea Bigelow. Their immediate step-son was another Maine writer, Charles Farrar Browne, known to the world as Artemus Ward.

As satirists these men were uneven. There was still too much optimism in the United States for the deep misanthropy that produces the great satirists. They were primarily popular humorists who used satire -- and painful mis-spelling -- as a method of winning laughs. But it was a satiric age, an age of burlesque, and when they were really angry they could be savage.

Sometimes their humor was little more than elaborate punning. A Civil War writer, the "Disbanded Volunteer," commented on one of his colleagues:

"A certain small beer Washington correspondent as delights in brewing mischief, reprints out the following in yesterday's New York Times. . ."

or discussing a report on a Confederate advance:

"A dispatch from Barnetown says Johnston seems to be threading his way up, with an eye to crossing over and hemming us in from the outskirt..."

But the humorists felt that their writing could play an important part in the final outcome of the war, and when they turned their attention to the government, the army, or the loyalists, they were brilliantly unpleasant, even forcing the victim of their attacks to laugh at their comedy. Occasionally the satire was delicate and urbane, striking like a gentleman's touch with a buggy whip. Orpheus C. Kerr began a dispatch from Washington:

"Having just made a luscious breakfast, my boy, on some biscuit discovered amid the ruins of Herculeanum, and purchased expressly for the Grand Army by a contracting agent for the Government, I take a sip of coffee from the very boot in which it was warmed, and hasten to pen my dispatch..."

But more often it was like the last of a bull whip. The Disbanded Volunteer discussed some of the Government contractors who seemed to feel that the war should be delayed:

"A certain portion of the Union men here -- I mean the horse flesh breeders, shoddy swindlers, beef banditti, rifle rascals, violation pirates, blanket beetles, and the gallows birds of that feather -- thinks the war would be full early for the army to prepare for a march..."

It was these humorists who fought the struggle for opinion in the columns of the nation's newspapers.

The importance of this satirical humor was immediately recognized by many important figures in both the Federal and Confederate governments. In 1872, Senator Charles Sumner was asked to contribute an introduction to a work entitled The Moral History of America's Life Struggle. It was a collection of letters written by David Ross Locke, better known as Petroleum V. Nasby. Mr. Sumner's introduction is worth quoting in full:

"The Nasby Letters are now collected in a beautiful volume, and the publishers have invited me to write an introduction. It can be only a word:"

"Beyond the interest in these letters as another instance of a peculiar literature -- illustrated by Major Jack Downing, Sam Selker, and the genius of Hosea Biglow -- they have an historic character from the part they performed in the war with slavery, and in advancing reconstruction. Appearing with a certain regularity and enjoying an extensive circulation, they became a constant and welcome ally. Unquestionably they were among the influences and agencies by which misfortune made it in all its forms was exposed, and public opinion assumed on the right side. It is possible to measure their value. Against the devices of slavery and its supporters, each letter was a speech, or one of those songs which stir the people. Therefore they belong to the political history of this critical period.

"Of publications during the war, none had such charm for Abraham Lincoln. He read every letter as it appeared, and kept them all within reach for refreshment. This strong liking illustrates his character, and will always awaken an interest in the letters. An incident in my own relations with him shows how easily he turned from care to humor."

"I had occasion to see President Lincoln very late in the evening of March 17th, 1865. The interview was in the familiar room known as his office, and also used to cabinet meetings. I did not take leave of him until some time after midnight, and then the business was not entirely finished. As I rose, he said, 'Come to me when I open shop in the morning; I shall have the order written, and you shall see it.' When do you open shop?' I asked. 'At nine o'clock,' he replied. At the hour named I was in the same room that I had so recently left. Very soon the President entered, stepping quickly with the promised order in his hands, which he at once read to me. It was to disapprove and annul the judgment and sentence of a court-martial in a case that had excited much feeling. While I was taking an abstract of the order for communication by telegraph to the anxious parties, he broke into quotation from Nasby. Finding me less at home than himself with his favorite humorist, he said pleasantly, 'I must initiate you,' and then repeated with enthusiasm the message he had sent to the author: 'For the genius to write these things I would gladly give up my office.'"

"Rising from his seat, he opened a desk behind, and taking from it a pamphlet collection of the letters already published, proceeded to read from it with infinite zest, while his melancholy features grew bright. It was a delight to see his surrender so completely to the fascination. Finding that I listened, he read for more than twenty minutes, and was still proceeding, when it occurred to me that there must be many at the door waiting to see him on graver matters. Taking advantage of a pause, I rose, and, thanking him for the lesson of the morning, went away. Some thirty persons, including senators and representatives, were in the ante-chamber as I passed out."

Like David Ross Locke, many of the Civil War humorists were newspaper men. Joseph Barber, the 'Disbanded Volunteer,' was a regular correspondent first for the Sunday Times; then for the Sunday Mercury in New York. Alfred C. Bills, who wrote under the name "Napoleon, the great Confederate Philosopher," was the editor of the New Orleans Era. Locke did much of his writing while he was editing the Jeffersonian in Pindley, Ohio. Others, like Charles Farrer Browne, who wrote under the name Artemus Ward; Robert S. Hewell, who was Orpheus C. Kerr (a pen on the words office seeker); and Horace Wheeler Shaw, who was Josh Billings, were professional humorists. Artemus Ward, "the genial screenman," was probably the most successful humorous lecturer of his time, although he was already ill with tuberculosis when the war broke out. Only one of the writers, the Georgia lawyer Charles Henry Smith, who wrote under the name Bill Arp, saw active military service. He enlisted in the Confederate Army in 1861 and served on the staffs of General J.S. Barlow and General Thomas Anderson. His first letters were written before he entered the service and he had little time to write again until he was appointed judge advocate of Macon in 1864. His Bill Arp was a brilliant creation, jeering back at the virulence of Ward and Nasby with a gift for topical humor that almost matched their own.

Although the humorists were younger men -- Locke was 28 when the war broke out, Browne only 25 -- they were passionately involved with the war. There was little place in 19th century America for political sophistication or fashionable immaturity. Locke's attacks on the South and on southern attitudes were as virulent as they were funny. The "V" in Petroleum V. Nasby stood for 'vitrified,' the contemporary term for sulphuric acid, and Nasby lived up to the name. Even the urbane Robert Hewell, whose Orpheus C. Kerr so often devoted his columns to literary parodies, slashed out after the bombardment of Sumter.

"...my present comprehensive estimate of all there is of Dixie may be summed up in twelve straight lines, under the general heading of"

RECAPITULATION

'Heath a ragged palmetto a Southerner sat, A-twisting the band of his Panama hat, And trying to lighten his mind of a load By mumming the words of the following ode: 'Oh! for a Negro, and oh! for a whip; Oh! for a cocktail, and oh! for a nlp; Please Oh! for a shot at old Creweley and Bachele; Oh! for a crack at a Yankee school-teacher; Oh! for a captain, and oh! for a ship; Oh! for a cargo of Negroes each trip.'
And so he kept oh-ing for all he had not, Not contented with owing for all that he'd got.

In return, Bill Arp jeered:

"Mr. Linkhorn, sir, when are this war to close? How much longer can you renew your note of ninety days which you said was time enough to settle this difficulty -- do you pay the interest? How much territory have you subjugated -- what makes cotton sell at 67 cents a pound in your diggings -- is it nor awful scarce -- what do your bony women do for stuffing and pudding? I heard they had to use hay and sawdust and such like, and I thought it must be very painful to their tender bosoms to have to resort to such a coarse commodity..."

Although the humorists sometimes turned their angry attacks into a joke, there was an undercurrent of seriousness to much of it. This hilarious and bitterly satirical writing.

The large audience that read their work is an indication of the faithfulness with which the Civil War humorists mirrored the emotions and attitudes, however petty and vicious or however exalted, of their communities. Orpheus C. Kerr's gibe at the Southerner,

"And so he kept oh-ing for all he had not, Not contented with owing for all that he'd got," may lack the grandeur of the speeches being made against the Confederacy, in Congress, but it certainly expresses the anger of many northern business men when they found that southern business men were using secession as an excuse to repudiate their debts. Since the Union states were filled with small and large business men, it is not surprising that more people read Kerr's letters than listened to the speeches in Congress. No northern orator could have more eloquently stated the attitudes of the average citizen than did Artemus Ward with his comment:

"... When, in the broad glare of the noonday sun, a speckled jackass boldly and maliceously kicks over a peanut stand, do we 'reason' with him? I guess not. And why 'reason' with those other southern people who are trying to kick over the Republic?..."

It is this quality of capturing and bringing to vivid life the emotions, attitudes, and opinions of the time that gives the fulminations of Petroleum V. Nasby, the jeers of Bill Arp, the clusters of the Dishonored Volunteer, and the insults of Artemus Ward their lasting importance as a historical document. Part of their importance, too, is their quality of sheer humor. Even when the writing was not profound it was always funny. As humorists, and, in a sense, historians of their time, these men have earned a lasting place in our literature.

NASBY'S ACCOUNT OF THE SECESSION OF WINGERT'S CORNERS

Wingert's Corners, Ohio, March the 21st, 1861.

South Carlyle and several other of the truly Democratic States having seceded -- gone, say, onto a journey after their rights -- Wingert's Corners, as truly Democratic as any of 'em, has followed suit.

A meeting was held last night, of which I was chairman, to take the matter of our grievances into consideration, and it was finally resolved that nothing short of secession would remedy our woes. Therefore the following address, which I wrote, was adopted and ordered to be published:

TO THE WORLD!

In taking a step which may, possibly, involve the state of which we have been heretofore a part into blood and convulsions, a decent respect for the opinion of the world requires us to give our reasons for taking that step.

Wingert's Corners has too long submitted to the imperious dictates of a tyrannical government. Our whole history has been one of aggression on the part of the State, and of meek and patient endurance on ours.

It refused to locate the State Capitol at the Corners, to the great detriment of our patriotic owners of real estate.

It refused to gravel the streets of the Corners, or even re-lay the plank-road.

It refused to locate the Penitentiary at the Corners, notwithstanding we do more towards filling it than any town in the State.

It refused to locate the State Fair at the Corners, blasting the hopes of our patriotic grocers.

It located the canal one hundred miles from the Corners.

We have never had a Governor, notwithstanding the President of this meeting has lived here for years, awaiting to be urged to accept it.
It has compelled us, year after year, to pay our share of the taxes.

It has never appointed any citizen of the place to any office where theft was possible, thus wilfully keeping capital away from us.

It refused to either pay our railroad subscription or slack-water our river.

Therefore, not being in humor to longer endure such outrages, we declare ourselves free and independent of the State, and will maintain our position with arms, if need be.

There was a lively time next day. A company of minute men was raised, and one of two-minute men. The secession flag, muskrat rampant, wasel cucohet, on a field d'egg-shell, waves from both grocers. Our merchant feels hopeful. Cut off from the State, direct trade with the Black Swamp follows; released from his indebtedness to Cincinnati, he will again lift his head. Our representative has agreed to resign -- when his term expires.

We are in earnest. Armed with justice and shot-guns, we bid the tyrants defiance.

P.S. -- The feelin' is intense -- the children have imbibed it. A lad just passed, displayin' the secession flag. It waved from behind. Dismaying concealment, the noble, lion-hearted boy wore it roundabout. We are firm.

N.B. -- We are still firm.

N.B., 2d. -- We are firm, unyielding, calm, and resolute.

PETROSEMUS V. NASHBY.

SIDE 1, Band 2.

ARTEMUS WARD'S INTERVIEW WITH PRESIDENT LINCOLN

I have no politics. Mary a one. I'm not in the business. If I was I suppose I should holier vociferously in the streets at night, and go home to Betty Jane smellin' of coal oil and gin in the mornin'. I should go to the polls early. I should stay there all day. I should see to it that my neighbors was there. I should get carriages to take the cripples, the infirm, and the indignant there. I should be on guard agin' frauds and such. I should be on the lookout for the infamous lies of the enemy, get up just before election for political effect. When all was over, and my candidate was elected, I should move heaven and earth -- so to speak -- until I got office, which if I didn't get a office I should turn around and abuse the Administration with all my might and main. But I'm not in the business. I'm in a far more respectable business nor what politics is. I wouldn't give two cents to be a Congressman.

The worst insult I ever received was when certain citizens of Baldsville asked me to run for the Legislature. Says I, 'My friends, dostn't think I'd stoop to that there?' They turned as white as a sheet. I spoke in my most avulsed tones, and they knew I wasn't to be trifled with. They slunked out of sight at once.

Therefore, having no politics, I made bold to visit Old Abe at his homestead in Springfield. I found the old feller in his parlor, surrounded by a perfect swarm of office seekers.

He looked up quite cross and says, 'Send in your petition by and by. I can't possibly look at it now. Indeed I can't. It's impossible, sir!'

'Mr. Lincoln, who do you 'spect I are?' said I.

'A office-seeker, to be sure!' said he.

'Well, sir,' said I, 'you's never more mistaken in your life. You haven't got a office I'd take under no circumstances. I'm A. Ward. War figures is my profession. I come to pay a friendly visit to the President elect of the United States. If so be you wants to see me, say so -- if not, say so, and I'm off like a jug handle."

'Mr. Ward, sit down. I am glad to see you, sir."

'Repose in Abraham's bosom!' said one of the office seekers, his idea being to get off a joke at my expense.

'Well,' says I, 'if all you fellers reposed in that there bosom there'll be mighty poor nursing for some of you!' whereupon Old Abe buttoned his vest to clear up and blushed like a maiden of sweet 16. Just at this point of the conversation another swarm of office-seekers arrived and come piling into the parlor. Some wanted post-office, some wanted collectorships, some wanted foreign missions, and all wanted something. I thought Old Abe would go crazy. One patriot from a small town in Michigan went up on top the house, got into the chimney and slid down into the parlor where Old Abe was endeavoring to keep the hungry pack of office-seekers from chewing his up alive without benefit of clergy. The minute he reached the fireplace, he jumped up, brushed the soot out of his eyes, and yelled:

'Don't make any appointment at the Springfield post-office till you've read my papers. All the respectful men in our town is signers to that there document!'

'Good God!' cried Old Abe staggering back, 'they came upon me from the skies -- down the chimneys, and from the bowels of the earth!' I hadn't more than stood him up straight, before another man came crashing down the chimney, his head striking me violently agin' the innards and prostrating my voluptuous form onto the floor. 'Mr. Lincoln,' shouted the infuriated being, 'my papers is signed by every clergyman in our town, and likewise the schoolmaster!'

Says I, 'you egregious ass,' getting up and brushing the dust from my eyes, 'I'll sign your papers with this bunch of bones, if you don't be a little more careful how you make my bread-basket a depot in the future. How do you like that air peremptory?' says I, shoving my fist under his nose. 'Then's the kind of papers I'll give you! There's the papers you want!'

'But I worked hard for the ticket; I toiled night and day! The patriot should be rewarded!'

'Virtue,' said I, 'holdin' the infuriated man by the collar, 'virtue, sir, is its own reward. Look at me!' He did look at me, and qualified before my gaze. 'The fact is,' I continued, looking round on the hungry crowd, 'there is scarcely a office for every oil lamp carried round during this campaign. I wish there was. I wish there was foreign missions to be filled on various lonely islands where epidemics rage incessantly, and if I was in Old Abe's place I'd send every mother's son of you to them. What are you here for?' I continued, warning up considerably, 'can't you give Abe a minute's peace? Don't you see he's worried most to death? Go home, you miserable men, go home and till the soil! Go to peddling tinware -- go to chopping wood -- go to boiling soap -- stuff sausages -- black boots -- get a clerkship on some respectable manufactory -- go round as original Swiss Bell Ringers -- become 'original and only' Campbell Minstrels -- go to lecturing at 30 dollars a night -- embark in the peanut business -- write for the Ledger -- say off your legs and go round giving concerts, with touching appeals to a charitable public, printed on your handbills -- anything for a honest living, but don't come 'round here drivin' Old Abe crazy by your outrageous cuttings up! Go home! 'Stand not upon the order of your going,' but go to once! If in five minutes from this time," says I, pulling out my new sixteen dollar hunting cased watch, and brandishing it before their eyes, -- "if in five minutes from this time a single soul of you remains on these here premises, I'll go out to my cage near by, and let my Boa Constrictor loose! and if he gets among you, you'll think Old Solferino has come again and no mistake! You ought to have seen them scamper! They run off as though Satan himself was after them with a red hot ten pronged pitchfork. In five minutes the premises was clear.

"How can I ever repay you, Mr. Ward, for your kindness?" said Old Abe, advancing and shaking me warmly by the hand. "How can I ever repay you, sir?"

"By giving the whole country a good sound administration. By pouring oil upon the troubled waters, North and South. By pursuing a patriotic, firm, and just course, and then, if any State wants to secede, let 'em secede!"

"How 'bout my Cabinet, Mister Ward?" said Abe.

"Fill it up with Swinemund, sir! Swinemund is devoid of politics. They hasn't got any principles! They know how to cater for the public. They know what the public wants, North and South. Swinemund, sir, is honest men. If you doubt their literary ability, look at their posters, and see small bills! If you want a Cabinet as is a Cabinet, fill it up with swinemund, but don't call on me. The moral was figure profession mustn't be permitted to go down while there's a drop of blood in these veins! A. Lincoln, I wish you well! If Powers or Walcutt was to pick out a model for a beautiful man, I scarcely think they'd sculpt you; but if you do the fair thing by your country, you'll make as pretty a angel as any of us! A. Lincoln, use the talents which Nature has put into you judiciously and firmly, and all will be well! A. Lincoln, adieu!"

He shook me cordially by the hand — we exchanged pictures, so we could gaze upon each others' lineaments when far away from one another — he at the helm of the ship of State, and I at the helm of the show business — admission only 15 cents.

SIDE 1, Band 3:
BILL APP TO ABE LINCOLN

Rom, Georgia — April, 1861

Mr. Linkhorn — Sir:

These are to inform you that we are all well, and hope these lines may find you in good health. We received your proclamation, and as you have put us in very short notice, a few of us boys have concluded to write you, and ask for a little more time. The fact is, we are most obliged to have a few more days, for the way things are happening, it is utterly impossible for us to dispense in twenty days. Old Virginny, and Tennessee, and North Callina, are continually aggravatin' us into tumults and carousements, and a body can't dispense until you put a stop to all unruly conduct on their part. I tried my darndest yesterday to disperse and retire, but it was no go; and besides, your marshal here ain't doing a damned thing — he don't read the riot act, nor resurrect a Martha, nor nothing, and ought to be turned out. If you conclude to do so, I am authorized to recommend to you Col. Gibbons or Mr. Melang, who would attend to the business as well as anybody.

The fact is, the boys round here want watching, or they'll take something. A few days ago I heard they surrounded two of our best Indians, because they was nacy Fort and Sumter. Most of 'em are so hot that they fairly sing when you pour water on 'em, and that's the way they make up their military companies here now — when a man applies to join the volunteers, they sprinkle him, and if he sizzles they take him, and if he don't they don't.

Mr. Linkhorn, sir, privately speakin', I'm afraid I'll get in a tight place here among these bloody, and have to slope out of it, and I would like to have your Scotch cap and cloak that you traveled in to Washington. I suppose you wouldn't be likely to use the same disguise again, when you left, and therefore I would propose to swap. I am five feet five, and could get my plow breeches and coat to you in eight or ten days if you can wait that long. I want you to write to me immediately about things generally, and let us know whereabouts you intend to do your fitting. Your proclamation says something about taking possession of all the private property at 'All Hanaus'. We can't find no such place on the map. I thought it must be about Charleston, or Savannah, or Harper's Ferry, but they say it ain't anywhere down South. One man said it was a little Factory on an island in Lake Champlain, where they make sand bags. My opinion is, that sand bag business won't pay, and it is a great waste of money. Our boys here carry their sand in their pizzards, where it keeps better, and is always handy. I'm afraid your Government is givin' you and your kangaroo a great deal of unnecessary trouble, and my humble advice is if things don't work better soon, you'd better grease it, or trade the darned old thing off. I'd show you a slight-of-hand trick that would change the whole concern into buttons quick. If you don't trade or do something else with it soon, it will spoil or die on your hands, certain.

Give my respects to Bill Seward and the other members of the kangaroo. What's Hannibal doin'? I don't hear anything from him nowadays.

Yours, with care,
BILL APP

P.S. — If you can possibly extend that order to thirty days, do so. We have sent you a check at Harper's Ferry (who keeps that darned old ferry now it's giving us a heap of trouble), but if you positively won't extend, we'll send you a check drawn by Jeff Davis, House of Representatives, payable on sight anywhere.

Yours,
B. A.

PETROLEUM V. BABBY SHOWS WHY HE SHOULD NOT BE DRAFTED.

Wingers Corners, Ohio — March 10, 1863.

I see in the papers last night that the Government has instituted a draft, and that in a few weeks some hundreds of thousands of peaceable citizens will be dragged to the tented field. I know not what others may do, but as for me, I can't go. Upon a rigid examination of my physical man, I find it would be worse than madness for me to undertake a campaign, to wit:

1. I'm bald-headed, and have been obliged to wear a wig these 22 years.

2. I have dandruff in what scanty hair still hangs around my venerable temples.

3. I have a chronic cataract.

4. I have lost, since Stanton's order to draft, the use of one eye entirely, and have chronic inflammation in the other.

5. My teeth is all unsound, my palate ain't exactly right, and I have had bronchitis 31 years last June. At present I have a cough, the paroxysms of which is frightful to behold.

6. I'm hollow-chested, an short-winded, and have always had pains in my back and side.

7. I'm afflicted with chronic diarrhoea and constiveness. The money I have paid (or promised to pay) for Jayne's carminative salagen and pills would astonish almost anybody.

8. I am ruptured in nine places, and am entirely enveloped with trusses.

9. I have varicose veins, have a white-swelling on one leg and a fever sore on the other; also one leg is shorter than the other, though I handle it so expert that nobody never noticed it.

10. I have corns and bunions on both feet, which would prevent me from marching.

I don't suppose that my political opinions, which are against the prosecution of this unconstitutional war, would have any weight with a drafting officer; but the above reasons why I can't go, will, I make no doubt, be sufficient.

PETROLEUM V. NASHY

SIDE II, Band 1:

THE DISBANDED VOLUNTEER HAS HALLUCINATIONS OF DELIRIUM.

Harrison's Landing -- August 7, 1862

Editors of the Sunday Mercury:

When congestive fever gets hold of a feller it's no joke. It knocks you down and sets onto you like an incubus, forbidden the use of the pen. I speak by the card, for since my last I've had a life-or-death rassle with this bog-bean of the South, and come all-blasting near getting the coup de gras. Had I been taken with it in the Penach sheeny, no doubt I should have got my everlasting furlough, but this high ground is more favorable to valetudinarians, and 'though much broken, I am gradually mending. At one time my mind wandered to that degree that the doctors considered me a goner, but there's a Providence as shapes our ends, and mine wasn't shaped, it seems. Consequently, here I am setting up on my cot in the sick shanty, with a swimmin' in my head and an awful sinkin' at my stomach, trying to get something lively through my hair for the columns of the Mercury. You mustn't anticipate anything, very brilliant, however, for I feel as if my upperworks was whizzing, and jerking, and snapping, like a Yankee clock out of gear.

It's extraordinary what strange things the most sensible man may say when laboring under the hallucinations of delirium. If the fattest office in the gift of the government was offered to advertisement to the purest patriots, I don't believe a truer friend of the Union than I be could be soared up atop the federal city and Pauunel Hall; and yet I learn that when the fever was on me I actually blasphemed the administration and even spoke in disparagement of that palladin of our Liberties, the mighty warrior and statesman of Illinois.

If it hasn't been that the course as nursed me took down my raving words in black and white, to read to me when I got well, I wouldn't have supposed it possible that such language could have passed the loyal lips of your correspondent. But when a man's not in a sanitary state of mind of course he isn't responsible for his raving words, and nobody don't ought to take 'em to heart.

It appears I thought I had the President and some of his constitutional advisers caged in a caravan and was toting 'em through the North, for a show. My nurse says I addressed the imaginary audiences as follows:

This, feller citizens (pointing into vacancy), is Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, called for shortness, and because he was never addicted to petty larceny, Honest Abe. He's an astonishing man at axe-ing chestnut trees and comrounds, and can split rails or sides with equal complacency. Mr. Lincoln, my popular friend, be kind enough to favor this enlightened audience with a button-buster. He wishes to know, ladies and gentlemen, why his boot is like an ancient Greek republic? I dare say you'll never guess, for it looks considerable more like the kingdom of Italy, a few sizes less than life. He explains. His boot is like an ancient Greek republic because it has a Sole on. Perhaps the answer is obscure. Again he will explain: Solon was a wise man of antiquity, but at the present day Solon geese may be found in Greenland.

You see his knowledge is universal. If time permitted, he would be reminded of a story, but unfortunately he has to be returned to the seat of government before the commencement of the Fall campaign. Observe, his eye twinkle, he has an idea. What is it, your excellency? He wishes me to state to this intellectual assemblage which I consider the most wonderful of all his stories. It's impossible -- there's such an immemorial number on 'em, and they're all so much alike. Once more he explains: The most wonderful of all his stories, is his upper story. There's no repressing his humor, you perceive; it sprouts out of his like petrolium from the mouth of a Pennsylvania oil well. His waggit tales would make a dog laugh, and it's a pity there's not time to get 'em off. Maybe you would like to learn why this cheerful citizen was elected to the Executive Chair. For variety, ladies and gentlemen, for variety. All our previous chief magistrates have been grave and dignified, and we wanted a rib-tickler, I 'spose. We've got one, anyhow. Like the man in the drum, he appears to think as all the world's a stage, and he wants to star it as a low comedian. He proposes to save the Union on jocular principles; but I'm afraid the laugh won't come in at present. In the meantime, however, it is a consolation to know that whatever disasters may overtake the nation, the White House will always be as merry as a circus. The President nods and winks in the affirmative, and would offer a closing remark. He says that care killed a cat but never averted a catastrophe; and that even the solemn old Roman Emperors, when they went to the Senate, had a set of fellers called lictors, that carried their fasces before 'em. You can set down now, Mr. President, while I stir up the Secretary of War.

This, ladies and gentlemen (setting up the cot bolster), is the head of the War Department. What he doesn't know about military strategy and such, all the generals in the world can't teach him. He is an inch taller than the first Napoleon, and considerably heavier. You are aware what the results of the conflict has been so far. Well we owe everything -- including the masterly back down in the Shenendoah Valley -- to this extraordinary critic. Hoo! hoo! Hurrah! Why in thunder don't you cheer? You've heard, perhaps, that him and General McClellan haven't set up their horses together. But I have it from the Paladian of our Liberties, in the next cage, that General McClellan looks upon the Honorable Secretary with much affection, and rainy reverie. Take him altogether, the Secretary of War is the biggest thing out in the military line, and anybody that questions his capacity for war and conquest will be immediately suppressed as a domestic traitor.

Such was the style in which I raved, as I understand, for more'n twenty-four hours, while the lunatic fit was onto me. Chase, Wells, and Seward come in for considerable abuse; but it seems I pitch freest into Honest old Abe and Secretary and Stanton, two men as I equally love and esteem when in the possession of my senses. But if a feller's out of his head, just what he don't want to say, and don't ought to say, is what he invariably does say.

There's a council of war among the leadin' officers today, and the rumor is that a push is to be made at once for Richmond; but, on the other hand, don't be surprised if you hear of a rebel push for Washington in less'n ten days from now. There's going to be another allmighty big skirmish afore the new recruits is ready. Tryin' to hope that we shall give 'em gas, I remain, weak but warmly,

Yours always,

A DISBANDED VOLUNTEER.

SIDE II, Band 2:

NASHY "WALDTH AND CURRENT."

Saint's Rest (which is in the State of New Jersey) -- December the 21st, 1864.

I've heard from Savannah! I have read of it. Fancy the feelings of a man who had been for weeks 'specting to hear of Sherman's bein' entirely shoved up by the undaunted Southern militia!

The following impromptu cuss and wail (equally mixed) reflects the state of mind of the Democracy of this section: --

Heart-sick, weary, alone, busted.
Gone-up, flayed, skinned, hung out.
Smashed, pulverized, shivered, scattered.
Physicked, poked, bled, blistered.
Such is Democracy!

Alone I sit, like Marius, among the ruins!
Alone I sit and curse, and this is my curse:

Cussed be Calhoun, for he introduced us to that painted harlot, State Rights, who seduced us.

Cussed be Pierce, who consented to the Harkness bill, which busted us.

Cussed be Buchanan, who pealed us.

Cussed be Breckenridge, who wouldn't support Douglas, and elected Linkin, which give our post-offices to Abolitionists.

Cussed be the post-masters -- say they become suddenly insane, and wildly go to trustin' out postage stamps to Democrats.

Cussed be Grant, and Sheridan, and Rosecrance, for they've done for Democracy.

Cussed be them as went in the army Democrats, and come out Abolitionists. (Which is a epidemic.)

Cussed be Vallindigham, which went a practising law, leaving me in the Democracy business alone, without any capital to run on.

'(SPECIALTY NERT.)

Cussed be Sherman, for he took Atlanta.

And he marched through the Confederacy, and respected not the feelings of anybody.

His path was, like Moses's, lit with pillars of fire and smoke, only the fire and smoke was behind him.

His path is a desert -- lo, the voice of the Shanghi is heard not in all the land.

And the people in the South lift up their voices and wail, because their Negroes are not.

And he took Savannah, and cotton enough to have satisfied Buchanan's cabinet.

And he turns his eye's in the direction of Richmond.

He started with three-score thousand -- he stopped with three-score and ten.

The wind bloweth where it listeth -- he listeth where he goeth.

As the lode-stone is to steel, so is his steel to the Georgia Negro -- it draweth him on.

Who will save us from the fury of Sherman? Who will deliver us from his hand?

Johnston he beat, hood he fooled, and Wheeler he flapped.

Lee would do it; but he's holding Grant, and can't let him go.

So he cavorts as he wills, a yearlin' sail with a chestnut burr under his tail.

Bitter in the mouth of a Democrat is quinine, bitterer is gall, but more bitterer is Federal victories.

We have been fed on victories lately, and our stomach turns.

Played out is Davis, and Democracy has followed suit.

The Democracy is turning war-men -- they are bowin'
the knee to Linkin.

Vallindingham will cry aloud for war of extermination, and Fernando Wood will howl for drafts.

For though John Brown's body lies all mouldy in the grave, his soul is a marchin' on.

I ain't the rose of Sharon, nor the lilly of the valley
-- I'm the last of the Copperheads!

I built my political house on sand -- it has fell, and I'm under the ruins.

Of politics I wash my hands, I shake its dust off my few remaining garments.

Late Pastor of the Church of the New Dispensation

SIDE II, Band 3:

ARTEMUS WARD IN RICHMOND

Richmond, Va. -- April 12, 18 & 69.

The old man finds himself once more in a sunny clime.
I come here a few days after the city capitulated.

My neighbors seemed surprised and astonished at this darin' bravery onto the part of a man at my time of life, but our family was never known to quail in danger's stormy hour.

My father was a sufferer in the Revolutionary War. My father once had a j Interview with General Lafayette.

Immediately on my arrival here, I proceeded to the Spotted wood House, and callin' to my assistance a young man from our town who writes a good runnin' hand, I put my autograph on the Register, and handin' my umrella to a bald-headed man behind the counter, who I supposed was Mr. Spottedwood, I said, "Spotty, how does she run?"

He called a colored person, and said:

"Show the gentleman to the cowyard, and give him cart Number 1."

"Isn't Grant here?" I said. "Perhaps Ulysses wouldn't mind my turnin' in with him."

"Do you know the Generals?" inquired Mr. Spottedwood.

"Well, no, not exactly; but he'll remember me. His brother-in-law's Aunt bought her eye meal of my uncle Levi all last winter. My uncle Levi's eye meal was ----""n

"Pooh! pooh!" said Spotty, "don't bother me," and he shoved my umbrella onto the floor. Observing to him that not to be so careless with that weapon, I accompanied the African to my lodgings.

"My brother," I said, "are you aware that you've been 'succubated? Do you realize how glorious it is to be free! Tell me, my dear brother, does it not seem like some dream, or do you realize the great fact in all its living and holy magnitude?"

He said he would take some gin.

I was showed to the cowyard, and laid down under a one-sail cart. The hotel was awful crowded, and I was worry. I hadn't gone to the Libby Prison. The I should have slept comfor'table enough if the bed boxes hadn't been pulled off me during the night by a around who come and hitched a sail to the cart and drove it off. I thin seen my covering, and my throat feels a little husky this mornin'.
General Bullock offers me the hospitality of the city, givin' me my choice of hospitals.

He has also very kindly placed at my disposal a smallpox ambulance.

UNION SENTIMENT

There is really a great deal of Union sentiment in this city. I see it on every hand.

I met a man today -- I am not at liberty to tell his name, but he is a well-known and influential citizen of Richmond, and says he, "Why we've been fighting against the Old Flag! Lord bless me, how singularly!"

He then borrowed five dollars of me and bust into a flood of tears.

Said another (a man of standing and formerly a bitter rebel), "Let us at once stop this effusion of blood! The Old Flag is good enough for me. Sir," he added, "you are from the North! Have you a doughnut or a piece of custard pie about you?"

I told him no, but I knew a man from Vermont who had just organized a sort of restaurant, where he could go and make a very comfortable breakfast on New England rum and cheese. He borrowed fifty cents of me, and asking me to send him a dial, made a photograph as soon as I got home, he walked off.

Said another, "There's been a tremendous Union feeling here from the first, but we were kept down by a reign of terror. Have you a daguerreotype of Wendell Phillips about your person? and will you lend me four dollars for a few days till we are once more a happy and united people?"

JEFF. DAVIS

Jeff. Davis is not popular here. She is regarded as a Southern sympathizer, and yet I'm told he was kind to his Parents. She ran away from 'em many years ago, and has never been back. This was showing 'em a good deal of consideration when we reflect what his conduct has been. Her capture in female apparel confuses me in regard to his sex, and you see I speak of him as a her as frequent as otherwise, and I guess he feels so himself.

R. LEE.

Robert Lee is regarded as a noble fellar.

He was opposed to the war at the first, and drew his sword very reluctantly. In fact, he wouldn't have drawn his sword at all, only he had a large stock of military clothes on hand, which he didn't want to waste. He says the colored man is right, and he will at once go to New York and open a Sabbath School for Negro ministrals.

THE CONFEDERATE ARMY

The surrender of R. Lee, J. Johnston, and others, leaves the Confederate Army in a rather shattered state. That army now consists of Kirby Smith, four miles, and a Bass drum, and is moving rapidly towards Texas.

A PROUD AND HAUGHTY SOUTHERNER

Feeling a little peckish, I went into a eatin' house to-day, and encountered a young man with long black hair and slender frame. He didn't wear much clothes, and there as he did wear looked unhealthy. He frowned on me, and said, kind of scornful, "So, Sir -- you come here to taunt us in our hour of trouble, do you?"

"No," said I, "I come here for hash!"

"Fish-bait!" he said, sneeringly; "I mean you are in this city for the purpose of gloatin' over a fallen people. Others may easily succumb, but as for me, I will never yield -- never, never!"

"Have sumthin' to eat?" I pleasantly suggested.

"Tripe and onions!" he said, fiercely; then he added, "I eat with you, but I hate you. You're a low-lived Yankee!"

To which I pleasantly replied, "How'll you have your tripe?"

"Fried, maws'il with plenty of ham-fats!"

He et very ravenous. Poor fellar! He had lived on odds and ends for several days, eatin' crackers that had been turned over by revelers in the bread-tray at the bar.

He got full at last, and his heart softened a little towards me. After all," he said, "you have some people at the North who are not wholly loathsome beasts!"

"Well, yes," I said, "we have now and then a man among us who isn't a cold-blooded scoundrel. Young man," I mildly but gravely said, "this cruel war is over, and you're licked! It's rather necessary for somebody to lick, in a good square, lively fight, and in this here case it happens to be the United States of America. You fight splendid, but we was too many for you. Then make the best of it, and let us all give in and put the Republic on a firmer basis nor ever.

"I don't gloat over your misfortunes, my young friend. Far from it. I'm a old man now, and my heart is softer nor it once was. You see my spectacles is mised with something very like tears. I'm thinkin' of the sea of good rich blood that has been split on both sides in this dreadful war! I'm thinkin' of our widows and orphans North, and of your'n in the South. I can cry for both. Believe me, my young friend, I can place my old hands tenderly on the fair young head of the Virginny girl whose lover was laid low in the battle dust by a federal bullet and say, as fervently and piously as a venerable aimer like me can say anything, God to good you, my poor dear, my poor dear."

I rose up to go, and taking my young Southern friend kindly by the hand, I said, "Young man, adieu! You Southern fellers is probably my brothers, 'bo' you've occasionally had a cursed queer way of showin' it! It's over now. Let us all join in and make a country on this continent that shall give all Europe the cramp in the stomatch every time they look at us! Adieu, adieu!"

And as I am through, I'll likewise say adieu to you, gentle reader, merely remarkin' that the Star-Spangled Banner is wavin' round loose again, and that there don't seem to be anything the matter with the Goddess of Liberty beyond a slight cold.

ARTEMIS WARD.
